The difference was minimal.I called 1-800-771-4966 and they quoted me $95 for a new keygen and $75 for a new keylooker. I was unsure if this was the same as a full reinstallation. Re: How much is a new keygen? Expanding on this, I looked at the pricetag of the old keymaker and the new one. I was able to work out they were equivalent, from my calculations. Still looking for a final confirmation though. I'm still working on an old laptop with a serious keygen problem. i was never able to get the old keymaker to work at all, it kept coming up with an error, and i tried calling them in order to purchase a new keygen and got the same (customer) support line that was given to me when i had a problem with my laptop a few months ago, and you're right, the support line is the same. I called a few different times, each time getting the same response, so i kept calling, and the same response was given to me. i would get to their "pro-services" department, and the same response would be given. i ended up figuring out the answer on my own. i did a factory reset and then reloaded Windows. I was able to get back to my computer, and it had the correct number of keys on it. i was able to get the original keygen to work, and all was well. So you had your PC wiped out and then reloaded with the correct keygen? I'm wondering if what they are doing to you is something similar to what they did to me. I was getting constant resets on my keyboard, and they told me it was a hardware problem. Then I came home one day to find that my mouse was going crazy (hard disk was going crazy too). I had an OS install disk, I loaded the OS and the mouse worked fine. And, yes, the same guy told me it was a hardware problem, and he couldn't do anything else, but he would call me back with instructions if I wanted. No instructions ever came, he didn't call me back, and I haven't heard from him since. so 82157476af
